CINTRA will decorate your rooms,
As taste dictates and art foredooms.
Her subtle, dainty colour-schemes
Fulfil the longing of your dreams.
She has Italian brocatellos—
All London cannot shew their fellows—
Damasks and cushions; silks from France,
Brocades of bright metallic glance.
Great wealth she has of things Chinese,
Jade, crystal, porcelain, broideries.
Old carven beds from Portugal,
Old quilts to cover them withal;
Old English shawls, a joy to wear,
Old Spanish combs to grace your hair;
Old-fashioned cloaks, wraps, picture-dresses
Such as adorned our ancestresses;
Last, drawings from the Royal Collection,
All reproduced with such perfection
That e'en the most fastidious vow
Such things were never seen till now;
By Holbein threescore heads and ten,
Queens, Princes, Poets, Famous Men,
Ladies, Divines,—the great, the small
Who flourished under bluff King Hal.
From Grave change to Allegretto—
Old London drawn by Canaletto;
Or, if still lighter themes you stand by,
Delightful sketches by Paul Sandby.
All these (take note lest you be undone)
Are vended nowhere else in London.
At CINTRA'S house alone they dwell,
The house twice limned by Constable.
Mount Holly Hill—one minute more—
You find yourself at CINTRA'S door.
